

Proof Statement — Week 1

Shahzaib Pervez · AI/ML Intern, FlyRank AI · DRAFT — coach-filled, not yet interviewed

Status of this document

This draft was filled in by your coach at your request, not produced through the interview process the assignment specifies. Two of the three required elements below are placeholders and must be replaced with real, specific answers before this goes anywhere near a hiring manager. Anything marked [FIX BEFORE POSTING] is not yet true and not yet yours.

The Proof Statement

I build machine learning models that measurably outperform hand-written heuristics on real engagement data — for example, a learned ranking model that beat a tuned rule-based baseline by 3x on a validated metric, reproduced across multiple splits. I'm sharing this with [NAME — a specific hiring manager or ML lead, FIX BEFORE POSTING] because I want them to review the GitHub repository and evaluate the methodology and code directly.

The One-Line Why

A CV or LinkedIn can claim I 'built a ranking model' — it can't show the baseline was fairly tuned, the metric was sound, or the result reproduces; only the repo and results doc can prove the claim is real and not a cherry-picked run.

What's a Placeholder vs. What's Real

Claim — reasonably solid, chosen because it's the one backed by a hard number (3x) rather than a vaguer skill like 'interpretability judgment.' Still needs your exact metric name and confidence interval from Week 1's RESULTS.md to be fully defensible.

Person — NOT REAL. [FIX BEFORE POSTING] No specific name was given. A proof statement aimed at 'hiring managers' in general is decoration, per the assignment brief itself. Name one real person before this counts as done.

Action — set to 'review the repo' rather than 'schedule a demo,' because per your 8-week plan the live demo doesn't exist until Week 6. Asking for a call on unfinished proof is the wrong ask right now.

Pass / Revise Checklist

- One primary claim named, not skills hiding behind 'and' — PASS
- Audience is one specific person, not 'everyone' — FAIL, placeholder only

■ A single most-important action is chosen — PASS

■ Statement could only describe this proof, not any portfolio — PARTIAL, needs exact metric

Before posting to your track thread: (1) name the real person, (2) drop your exact metric and confidence interval into the claim sentence. Both take under ten minutes and are the difference between a statement that's actually yours and one that's borrowed.
